1. SECOND ADVANCED TRAINING INSTITUTE IN HEALTH BEHAVIOR THEORY

The National Cancer Institute will sponsor an intensive, 7-day workshop for early career investigators June 19-26, 2005 in Madison, Wisconsin. The objectives of the institute are to allow 25 attendees to extend their understanding of the assumptions underlying major types of health behavior theory, to explore how theories are tested and improved, and to examine how to use theories appropriately in designing interventions. Lead instructors include researchers Neil Weinstein, Rutgers University, Alex Rothman, University of Minnesota, Susan Curry, University of Illinois at Chicago, and Barbara Curbow, Johns Hopkins University.

Applicants from all disciplines are welcome to apply and interest in cancer is not required. More information, an application, and comments from previous participants available at <http://www.scgcorp.com/ati2005>. Applications due by February 1, 2005
