

Tenure-track Positions at the Full Professor Rank

The Institute for Prevention Research (IPR) and the Department of Preventive Medicine at the University of Southern California

The Institute for Prevention Research (IPR) and the Department of Preventive Medicine at the University of Southern California invites applications for 1-2 full-time tenure track positions at the rank of professor. The successful candidate is expected to develop and lead, or co-lead, an interdisciplinary center for health disparities research that draws together faculty from multiple departments and schools who are already conducting health disparities research with a focus on behavioral epidemiology and social behavioral approaches to prevention of health and mental health problems. Health disparities is broadly defined, and can encompass research in multiethnic settings, community-based participatory research, and underserved populations. IPR faculty conduct a wide array of studies that are relevant to health disparities, including the development and evaluation of state, national, and international networks for cancer, tobacco, and HIV prevention; large minority health centers and cancer prevention centers; and tobacco, obesity, and cancer prevention trials in multiethnic settings. The successful candidate is expected to develop his/her own vision for coordinating and expanding these efforts, and will have postdoctoral and administrative support to do so.

The successful candidate is also expected to teach in one of the academic programs offered by IPR, which include degree programs at the bachelors, masters and doctoral level. Applicants must have a commitment and evidence of high quality teaching and mentoring at the graduate and undergraduate levels. The candidate is expected to demonstrate a strong history of NIH funding, and a publication record that represents a significant impact on either health disparities or health behavior or both. Review of applicants will begin immediately and continue until the candidate is selected. USC is an equal opportunity employer, with excellent retirement and health benefits. Applicants must submit curriculum vitae, three letters of reference, representative publications or preprints, and statements of research and teaching interests to Dr. Jean Richardson, 1441 Eastlake Ave., Suite 3409, Los Angeles, California, 90033 or by email to jeanr@usc.edu.