JOB DESCRIPTION

The Ohio State University College of Public Health is seeking an innovative leader and scholar to chair its Division of Health Behavior and Health Promotion. The successful candidate will provide senior leadership and vision in the development and application of behavioral science within the College of Public Health and other health sciences colleges at Ohio State. This position requires academic credentials consistent with appointment as a professor with tenure in the College of Public Health. The candidate is expected to lead an active community-focused research program, collaborate in research initiatives with other investigators both within and outside the College of Public Health, direct a health behavior and health promotion training program for MPH and PhD students, recruit and mentor new faculty, and manage the Division's resources. Candidates should have a PhD relevant to health behavior and health promotion in public health; have a demonstrated record of administrative experience; and have a strong and distinguished record of teaching, mentoring, and scholarly research. Applications are due by December 1, 2011.

Application

Applications will be accepted immediately, and will be considered until the search has concluded. Applicants are encouraged to submit applications via e-mail. Please send a cover letter and your curriculum vitae to:
